The newspapers and news pamphlets gathered by the Reverend Charles Burney (1757-1817) represent the largest single collection of 17th and 18th century English news media available anywhere. The original Burney volumes are now in a fragile condition and have been restricted from ordinary reading room use. And, until recently, the primary access has been through microfilm.

Now, thanks to Gale's partnership with the British Library, this digital collection can be full-text searched and easily accessed by scholars and researchers worldwide, opening up new possibilities of research in British and colonial history, literature, business, genealogy and more.

200 years of accounts

17th and 18th Century Burney Collection Newspapers includes nearly 1,270 pamphlets, proclamations, newsbooks and newspapers from the period. The titles range in date from 1603 to the early 1800s — from England, Ireland, Scotland and a handful of papers from British colonies in the Americas and Asia.

These 200 years of accounts are an essential research tool for the study of British history and culture at crucial periods in the nation's development as a world power. Plus, cultural trends, political currents and social problems reflected in the Burney Collection Newspapers give freshness and immediacy to historical events.

FEATURES:

- Contains approximately 1,270 titles — from London, British Isles and the colonies
- Nearly 1 million newspaper pages
- Newspapers, newsbooks, Acts of Parliament, addresses, broadsides, pamphlets, proclamations
- The most comprehensive collection of early English newspapers
- Employs new conservation techniques (new imaging)
- Gale platform endorsed by the British Library

17th and 18th Century Burney Collection Newspapers

Access all the Burney treasures

For many titles, the 17th and 18th Century Burney Collection Newspapers is the only substantial collection of issues available in the world. While many Burney newspapers are well known, other pamphlets and broadsides included in the collection have remained largely hidden. Newly digitized, all Burney treasures are now fully text-searchable in Gale Digital Collections.

Supports all forms of historical research

The Burney Collection Newspapers are a primary source of first resort for all forms of historical research related to the 17th and 18th centuries in Britain or the world, including:

- Political history. Delve into the news coverage of the principal events of the English Civil War (including the execution of Charles I); read about the call for political reform and the attacks on George III's ministers for the terms they had agreed in the Treaty of Paris, which ended the Seven Years' War; and much more.
- Economic and business history. Amass and analyze all sorts of economic information — prices of stocks and shares, shipping information and more.
- Literary history. Uncover essays, poems, and more substantial works published in parts within both newspapers and periodicals and how these works were received at the time.
- History of trades. See how trades are represented in the advertisements, including the book trade which is particularly well documented through advertisements for forthcoming and already published books, including publication dates and prices.

- History of advertising. Explore the advertisements as a developing genre, as well as source of information on disparate topics — medicines (quack or otherwise), goods to be sold, property to be sold or leased, runaway servants, lost or stolen personal effects and many others.
- History of theater. Learn from theater advertisements, criticism of their repertoire as well as gossip about the players.
- History of individuals. Unearth a rich source of information about individuals, useful to family as well as social historians, not only in the form of notices of births, marriages and deaths, but also through the many individual men, women, and children (of every social standing) mentioned in British newspapers. There are aristocrats, gentry, merchants, tradesmen, authors, doctors, entrepreneurs, and many others who are the subjects of surprising, morally improving or amusing anecdotes.
- History of the press. Chart the development of the concepts of 'news', 'newspapers' and the 'free press'.

by Location and more give users multiple ways to access the wealth of information found in the Burney newspapers.
